In 1887, Johann Meyer operated a ferry across the Nerang River from Southport. From that point, Meyer's ferry would take the travellers across the river to Meyer's Ferry Road at Elston (aka Surfers Paradise) along which the travellers would walk to the surf beach.

Although the surf beaches of Elston were a popular destination, the lack of road access limited the extent of residential and commercial development.^{[3][4]} It was not until 1925 that the Jubilee Bridge was built between Southport and Main Beach which opened up Surfers Paradise for tourism and associated development and eliminated the need for the ferry service.

The present day Ferry Road is only southbound part of the original Ferry Road.
